Carter, who wrote in his diary on 10 April that "The Iranian terrorists are making all kinds of crazy threats to kill the American hostages if they are invaded by Iraq—which they identify as an American puppet," may have been influenced by such reports to approve a rescue mission prior to the outbreak of a possible Iran–Iraq War.<sup>[16]</sup> Planning and preparation A pair of RH-53Ds aboard USS Nimitz Planning for a possible rescue mission began on November 6, two days after the hostages were taken.[17] Army Major General James B. Facing elections and with little to show from negotiations, the Carter government ordered the State Department to sever diplomatic relations with Iran on 7 April 1980.[11] Cyrus Vance, the United States Secretary of State, had argued against a push by National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski for a military solution to the crisis.[12] Vance left Washington on Thursday 10 April for a long weekend vacation in Florida.[12] On Friday 11 April, Brzezinski held a newly scheduled meeting of the National Security Council where he insisted that it was time to "lance the boil".[13] and Carter said it was "time for us to bring our hostages home".[14] It was during this Security Council meeting of 11 April, that Carter confirmed that he had authorized the mission.[12][13][Note 1] He did however continue to entertain the planning for a concurrent punitive air-strike, but this was finally rejected on 23 April, one day prior to the commencement of the mission.[13] The rescue mission was code named Operation Eagle Claw.[15] Operation Eagle Claw occurred amidst a breakdown in diplomatic relations between Iran and its western neighbor Iraq, including frequent border skirmishes, calls by Khomeini for Iraqi Shi'ites to revolt against the ruling Ba'ath Party, and allegations of Iraqi support for Arab and Kurdish separatists in Iran. Senior helicopter pilot Seiffert refused to use unsafe Bluebeard 2 on the mission, while Beckwith (field commander for ground forces) refused to consider reducing his trained rescue team's size. In addition, the CIA had prepared an in-country team of 15 Iranian and American Persian-speakers, most of whom would act as truck drivers.[25] Ingress The complex plan required that on the first night, three USAF EC-130Es (Call signs: Republic 4, 5, and 6) carrying the logistical supplies and three MC-130E Combat Talons (Call signs: Dragon 1, 2, and 3) carrying Delta Force and Ranger troops (132 assault and security troops in total)[26] would depart the island of Masirah, off the coast of Oman for Desert One, a flight of over 1,000 miles (1600 km). The bus was forced to halt by the Rangers and the passengers were detained aboard Republic 3.[37][Note 5] Minutes after the bus had been stopped, the Rangers in the road-watch team observed a fuel tanker truck, ignoring their orders to halt, bearing down on them.[38] The truck, apparently smuggling fuel, was blown up by the Army Ranger roadblock team using a shoulder-fired rocket as it tried to escape the site. They could not be destroyed, because they were loaded with ammunition and any fire or explosion would have endangered the C-130s.[48] The EC-130s carried the remaining forces back to the intermediate airfield at Masirah Island, where two C-141 medical evacuation aircraft from the staging base at Wadi Abu Shihat, Egypt[Note 9] picked up the injured personnel, helicopter crews, Rangers and Delta Force members, and returned to Wadi Kena. ^ Bastani, Hossein (May 25, 1999). At the time of the survey, the salt-flat floor was hard-packed sand, but in the ensuing three weeks an ankle-deep layer of powdery sand had been deposited by sandstorms.[21][23] The Tehran CIA Special Activities Division in-country parliamentary team, led by retired U.S. Army Special Forces officer Richard J. As the tanker truck was thought to be engaged in clandestine smuggling, the driver was not considered to pose a security threat to the mission.[39] However, the resulting fire illuminated the nighttime landscape for many miles around, and actually provided a visual guide to Desert One for the disoriented incoming helicopters. In addition to the 160th SOAR's creation, the US Defense Department now trains many military helicopter pilots in low-level penetration, aerial refueling and use of night-vision goggles. Even though numerous rehearsal exercises were successful, the helicopters' failure during the first attempt resulted in the development of a subsequent concept involving only fixed-wing STOL aircraft capable of flying from the US to Iran using aerial refueling, then returning to land on an aircraft carrier for medical treatment of wounded.[citation needed] The concept called Operation Credible Sport, was developed but never implemented. The RH-53D struck the EC-130's vertical stabilizer with its main rotor and crashed into the EC-130's wing roof.[47] In the ensuing explosion and fire, eight servicemen died: five of the fourteen USAF aircrew in the EC-130, and three of the five USMC aircrew in the RH-53D, with only the helicopter's pilot and co-pilot (both badly burned) surviving.[Note 8] After the crash, it was decided to abandon the helicopters and during the frantic evacuation to the helicopter crews, unsuccessful attempts were made to retrieve their classified mission documents and destroy the aircraft. ^ Amini, Hossein (4 November 2015). In addition to the formal report, various reasons for the mission failure have been argued, with most analysts agreeing that an excessively complex plan, poor operational planning, flawed command structure, lack of adequate pilot training and poor weather conditions were all contributing factors and combined to the failure of the operation.[66] Units involved in the operation RH-53D helicopter rotor remnant from Operation Eagle Claw on display in the former US Embassy in Tehran US Air Force 1st Special Operations Wing: 8th Special Operations Squadron (EC-130J)[67] 436th Military Airlift Wing[68] 437th Military Airlift Wing[68] 438th Military Airlift Wing[68] 322d Airlift Division[68][69] US Army 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment-Delta ("Delta Force")[70] Special Forces Detachment "A" Berlin Brigade[71][72] 75th Infantry Regiment (elements from 1st and 2nd Ranger Battalions)[73] US Navy and Marine Corps USS Nimitz (CVN-68)[29] with Carrier Air Wing 8 USS Coral Sea (CV-43) USS California (CGN-36) USS Gridley (CG-21) USS Okinawa (LPH-3) USS Alamo (LSD-33)[74] USS San Bernardino (LST-1189) USS Mobile (LKA-115) USS Barbey (FF-1088) USS William H.
